√ My practice in Cases of appeals to the Chief Court, which is always given to the Govt Advocate. It is only in regard to appeals before Sessions Judges and Magistrates that Mr Sparkes has made this reference in Sparkes before. The Current practice is not to give any notice to the Resp. Respondent, even though it is a Police Case, except in important Cases. Even in appeals before the Sessions Court the Public Prosecutor is not deputed to support generally the Conviction in Every Case appealed against. The District Magistrate generally exercises his discretion. The practice does not seem to have given rise to any Complaint so far. The D.t Magts may perhaps be consulted.

at present there is no general Rule made by the Government appointing an officer in each Department, to whom notice of appeals against Convictions in cases relating to that Department should be given, under Section 422 Criminal Procedure Code. Consequently, no such notice is now invariably being given to any Department of appeals relating to it, and the appellate Court exercises its discretion in the matter of giving notices of appeal to the Department concerned in cases where it considers it necessary to do so in the interests of public justice.

2. In the absence of a general rule, applicable to all departments, I do not see why an exception should be made as regards the Excise cases alone. I am of opinion that it is quite unnecessary to issue
